Coaches Fast Developing Candidates for Positions on 1913 Varsity Eleven.

Chapel Hill, N. C., September 18—
Ten days in advance of its first scheduled game with Wake Forest College, and with the game of the Richmond Medical College closely following, Carolinas' football squad is spending its force in field practice by day and in drill and "book" instruction by night. To develop a creditable team is the impending task confronting the coaching staff and the alumni of the institution, and they have attacked that task with a thoroughness that is bound to shape the material in hand.

This week's practice has been directed particularly to the development of the material counted on in the carlier stages of the football practice of the year.

Matinee and panies through Chairman Travis, of the Corporation Commission. The lat-ter is preparing the statement of the situation, the recommendation of the Corporation Commission that the pro-posal as amended be adopted, and will submit these to the Covernor without submit these to the Governor without delay. With the definite recommendation by the Corporation Commission that the proposal be adopted and the opinion expressed by Chairman Clark, of the Interstate Commerce Commission that North Carolina should accept this proposal by all means, there is an increasing impression that there will also be recommendation for settlement from the Governor, and that when the legislators gather here next week it will be found that the freight rate question has mellowed down to nothing more than indefinitely approv-ing a settlement embodied in the proposal as transmitted by the Governor. A large audience last night heard spirited addresses by John Barrett, di-rector-general of the Pan-American Union, and Dr. Clarence J. Owen, managing director of the Southern Com-mercial Congress, in which they urged that North Carolina send large delegations to the Southern Commercial Contions to the Southern Commercial Congress soon to convene in Mobile, as many representatives as possible for the inspection of the Panama Canal Zone, and that the principal cities of the South join in bearing the expense of at least one wide-awake man on the proposed tour of the countries of South American, soon to become so much American, soon to become so much more closely allied to the United States through the canal trade.

TRIFLER LANDS

Well Ridden by Messenger Mc-Taggart, Filly Finishes First

In Driving Race.

Havre de Grace, September 18.—J. L. Holland's brown filly, Trifler, excellently ridden by "Messenger" McTaggart, captured the Princeton selling stakes in a furious drive here to-day. Dick Williams and the Holland coterie profited greatly by the victory, for they backed the daughter of Ogden heavily. W. G. Yanke, the California plunger, is credited with making his blggest bet this year on Korfnage. On account of heavy rains last night the track was muddy, and there were many scratches, so the ex-Musician only got one to two for his money. Korfnage rolled home and was boosted and sold to W. R. Mizell for $1,600.

IN The WAKE of The GAME

Making a hurried survey of the situation, it's all over but the joyous whoop. Glants and Mackmen will fight it out, will battle to the frazzled edge for the privilege of dividing the winner's share of the world's series. It's come to the point where comparisons are being made as to the relative strength of the two pennant winners. Hughey Jennings, who last season brought forth rather severe criticisms because of his assertion that the Giants had a better team than the Red Sox, comes forward once more in spite of previous warnings, and shouts that McGraw's team looked allfired good for the journey.

Jennings finds that the two teams are very evenly matched. To Mack he gives the credit of having a stout and hardy bunch of fusiladers, and to McGraw he allots the hurling ability. His conclusion is that the team that wins will be the team that wins. In the Athletics' ranks he finds but one dependable flinger, while he believes that in Mathewson, Marquard, Tesreau and Demaree, the redoubtable Jawn J. has a quartet that is sure to harass the Elephants.

It makes vastly pleasant reading, this dissertation by Hughey Jennings, but what lessens his opinion as an expert is that he got his first start in the baseball world under J. J. McGraw. Of course, no one would even hint that the Tiger leader is a traitor to the American League, or that he allows sentiment to enter into his cold analysis of a situation, but the fact remains that McGraw and Jennings are warm personal friends, that McGraw was once manager of the team upon which Jennings made his reputation. Those who tie their faith to the opinion rendered by a leader, should take these facts into consideration.

Jennings is at least right in one assertion: the teams are too evenly matched to choose a favorite. There is just one thing that would give either team a logical and just advantage, and that is, injuries to some of the star men. For instance, should Stuffy McInnes be out of the series, Mack would unquestionably be under a handicap. Stuffy can hit the ball, and his worth as a defensive player has been demonstrated time and again. The same thing would apply to McGraw. Should he lose Doyle or Shafer, or some of his other trusties he would be hard put to it. But McInnes, in spite of the injury received two days ago, will be back in time for the big rub, and McGraw hasn't any of his men in the hospital. Thus it still remains a toss-up at this time.

The ruling of the directors of the National Commission reversing the finding of the directors of the National League, which body in turn had reversed the decision of Umpire Brennan regarding the game played be-tween New York and Philadelphia, in Philadelphia, on August 30, brings about this situation: For the first time in National League history a tripleheader is to be played. On October 2, in New York, Phils and Glants will resume play just as it was on that fateful day in the ninth inning, when Brennan gave the game to New York after McGraw had protested that some of the fans in the centre field bleachers were using straw hats and mirrors to disturb the batting Giants.

The ruling of the commission is that the game be played over under the same conditions that existed in Philadelphia. It will be impossible to live literally to this ruling. The crowd from Philadelphia certainly cannot be brought to New York. Even if this could be done it is hardly probable that the individuals could be properly manned with the mirrors and star bennys that caused the protest. But Chalmers must be in the box for Philadelphia and Murray must be at bat for New York. Two men must be retired before two runs are scored, or else Philadelphia wins by the score of 8 to 6, at which the game stood when it was ended. The tripleheader comes about because two games are already scheduled for that date between Dooin's men and McGraw's crowd.

Boston vesterday went shead of Brooklyn, while Cincinnati gained on both. It is but a short jump for the Reds from their lowly seventh place to fifth place, and if Joe Tinker can bridge the chasm he will be a hero in Redland. Boston split with Chicago; Brooklyn lost and Cincinnati won.

Ben Spencer had quite a day for himself in the game between Washington and Detroit. The Petersburg youngster made two hits out of four times up, drove in two runs and scored one for himself. Marriage seems to have steadied him, and responsibility seems to have made him realize that playing baseball is a serious business. If he has come to such a conclusion he's going to make a valuable man for Clark Griffith.

Jackson and Speaker gained on Ty Cobb for batting honors in the American League, though not enough seriously to challenge the Georgian's right of way. Cobb went hitless in four tries; Jackson made two out of five tries, while Speaker had to be satisfied with one safety out of four

The Cumberland County branch of the North Carolina Just Freight Rates Association to-day telegraphed to Governor Locke Craig a protest against the adoption of the latest proposition made by the railroads of the State through Corporation Commissioner Travis, which offers ne rate reductions to the North Carolina cities having water connections.

The protest includes resolutions adopted last night at a meeting of the local organization, a copy of which local organization, a copy of which of the State organization; J. A. Coach Grosebaugh, of East Orange, and Coach William Broadhead, of Barringer High School, have decided to number their football players.
